An Employee is a Terrible Thing to Waste:
Managing Your Disabilities to Save Your Job and Possibly, Your Life

Presenter:
Barry J. Niman, M.A.
University of California, San Diego
Employee Rehabilitation Program Manager
Certified as Rehabilitation Counselor, Case Manager, Employee Assistance Professional and Disability Management Specialist

- What would you do if you slipped and fell in the shower tomorrow morning and as a result, you were unable to walk or think as well as you can today?
- How would you respond to such a surprising situation?
- Would you come to work?
- Would your supervisor accommodate any work restrictions?
- Would you be able to meet your financial obligations?

Sometimes, a medical condition can force you to reassess your options. A medical impairment may prevent you from working if you do not understand the systems and options involved in managing your situation.

This presentation will provide you with clear information about ways that you can prevent a medical condition from becoming disabling by choosing your best job accommodation, leave, and disability benefit options so you will be able to continue to work. For most of us, working is important for many reasons in addition to earning a living. Participating in this learning opportunity may help you protect the future of your career and prepare to safeguard much more of what’s important to you.

Wednesday, October 18, 2006
12:00 noon to 1:30 p.m.
UCSD Price Center, Gallery B
Light refreshments will be served

Live Streaming Video activated at noon 10-18-2006 at: